

Hmm, tell me more I asked?

Well, we have a local smallgoods company that is keen to get some help on their sales.

Could I adapt 25 years of selling media, retail, and other products to this challenge?

Why not?

Over the last 18 months working alongside a great team of people we managed to grow that company and sales of sausages by 69%.

What did we do?

Kaizen- There was a phrase used by Japanese manufacturers in the '70s-'80s that worked on the premise that to make their factories better they needed to have a mindset of constant and never-ending improvement.

Over time they lifted the perception of not being very good at manufacturing to the best in the world.

Think of Toyota, Sony.

What did we do with our sausage company, you may ask, to get that sort of growth?

Acquisition and retention.

1. Acquisition- In the winter there's not a lot of sausages sold, so we decided that was when we would build our client base. Key sales strategies to lift potential sales into the summer.
2. Retention - It's easier to sell into a client you already have, than to one you don't. We made sure that they were appreciated and looked after.

How did we do that.

Developed a 90-day love plan.

90 days of well thought out sales plans to help bed down our relationship.

Just a simple system that works and is scalable.

If you're exhausted with chasing the next sales, maybe even need some love, my calendars are open.
