

What airlines can teach about Upsells and cross Sells.

As many of you may know, I owned a media consultancy company called NRS Media. We consulted Radio, TV, and Newspaper publishers, and online media companies all over the world.

Delve into the world of upselling as airlines show us how to upsell.

As you can probably appreciate, it involved a lot of travel, with many of our staff often on planes, always travelling somewhere.

If you want to watch a great movie on air travel as a businessperson, I would recommend Up in the Air starring George Clooney.

Some of the tricks and manoeuvres he goes through to get on some of his flights are very funny, and I am sure many of our staff think the same as they contemplate their journeys.

One of the questions that I always ask when I arrive at the counter is,

“How busy is the flight today?” If the answer is “Okay, not too bad, not too full,” I always ask the next question.

“Can you block off the middle seat?” I ask.

“I’ve got a bit of work to do and want to spread out.”

Usually, if they have one, they will do it for me.

You see, the middle seat is NOT the seat of choice for frequent travellers; it’s a seat that nobody wants, unless it’s the kids, and they share it with each other.

The kids don’t mind; it gives them the chance to play against each other with some new video game or a movie they can watch.

“Escape the dreaded middle seat with an empty seat next to you!”

So, the question is, would you pay for the seat to be FREE? Well, some people would, and one airline, my airline, Air New Zealand, does just that.

It’s part of their new makeover on their new flash Boeing 777s. If the seat next to you is empty, you can secure it if you part with $150.

Example Upsells:

1. Upgrade to Premium Economy: Enjoy extra legroom, enhanced services, and priority boarding for a more comfortable and exclusive travel experience.
2. In-flight Wi-Fi Package: Stay connected during your flight with high-speed internet access and unlimited browsing. Upgrade your ticket to access this convenient service.
3. Business Class Lounge Access: Make the most of your pre-flight experience with access to the luxurious business class lounge, offering complimentary refreshments, comfortable seating, and premium amenities.

By implementing these upsells, airlines can enhance their customers' overall travel experience while generating additional revenue.
