

When I owned NRS Media, Michael Botta was one of the best sales guys.

Michael was one of our longest-standing staff members at NRS Media and was based in our Long Beach office in good 'ole' USA.

He was in front of thousands of media salespeople each year and travelled for weeks on end with our NRS Media message.

He understands the importance of work. Here is his definition of W-O-R-K:

W: Weighing

O: Opportunities

R: Repeatedly

(with)

K: Knowledge

We come to work, and what makes it frustrating for many of us at times is that we are challenged to continually Weigh (consider, ponder, create) the Opportunities (challenges, problems, setbacks) that are Repeatedly uncovered during our day, which then causes us to tap into our Knowledge (experience, success, etc.) to fix the problem.

This is a never-ending process.

Is work a gift?

Work should be viewed as an incredible gift that makes us more helpful to others.

Businesses all over the world are happy to compensate you for your WORK.

Work is the giving of yourself to help another. Work is the best thing for us because, by its very nature, it brings out our best qualities, intentions, and solutions.

What work isn't:

If, on the other hand, one views' W-O-R-K as: Wanting Others to Replace my Knowhow, then that individual is essentially holding back their unique gift and perspective and not giving of themselves to help another.

Work for some people is merely something they have to do and not something that provides them with an open the door to use their creativity - or is not viewed as a unique opportunity to share their creative insight for the benefit of another.

Fear, disappointment, rejection, anger, and blame keep one from doing their best WORK.

How we view WORK significantly impacts ourselves, our families, and the benefit of others. By doing our best WORK, we can change lives for the better.

A great reason to get up and work every day, make sure you do something you love.

Thanks, Mr Botta!
